

The Claretian Echo

VOLUME 1: ISSUE 22

JULY 18TH 2012

St Clarets GFC: Memories are made of this.

Comer Turns To Fashion

Super Slopper

With the weather currently playing havoc with the London GAA calendar, Claretian Luke Kelly has decided to try and develop a solution to the saturation situation.

Kelly and several engineering colleague from university, have taken it upon themselves to attempt to design a low-cost super-slopper, similar to that used to dry sodden outfielders at cricket grounds.

In what could only be described as a selfless act of research and sacrifice, Kelly and his crew have been pictured at their secret hideaway, working hard on a variety of designs, aimed at removing unwanted excess liquid from reciprocals.

Kelly's crew at work

Grateful County Board officials have publicly stated their admiration for Kelly's project, as have several bar owners in the Magaluf area.

Incoming St Clarets senior manager Tony Murphy is said to be "perplexed and flabbergasted" at the number of side interests that his newly inherited charges are juggling at present.

The Offaly native, who is challenged with turning the current senior team into Championship contenders in a matter of weeks, has told friends that he can't believe the "explosion of cottage industry interests" that many of his players are engaged in.

Having been brought up to speed with the dance craze that swept through the club earlier in the year, Murphy is now having

Mossie's 2011 "away strip" creation

Comer: testing the fit of his design while exercising his shoulder.

to come to grips with an obsession with fashion and design that seems to have gripped the club.

The latest convert is injury plagued defender Niall Comer, who has spent the last two weeks on retreat, putting the finishing touches to what he believes will be a new improved jersey for St Clarets, that he claims is much "more breathable while offering better support".

Citing Eamonn Colleran's much maligned attempt in 2011 at designing a new away strip for the club as his inspiration, Comer has fled overseas so that he can focus on the project.

On the back of this news, Hungarian police have this week released new footage of Comer's recent brush with a grizzly.

They have deduced from the film that Comer was in fact the one doing the chasing, as opposed to his own story of being chased by the bear.

It turns out that authorities, who have banned Comer from re-entering Hungary, believe that he was trying to catch the bear for its fur, which he was going to use for another of his creations.

And he wondered why the bear wasn't happy!

Collen-Time On The Law

Legal-eagle Marc Collentine has this week announced his intention to give up his law career in pursuit of his childhood ambition of appearing on the front of a packet of frozen corn.

Ho Ho Ho: Marc dressed as his hero

Sources close to the Collentine family say that from a very young age, Marc was mesmerised by the Jolly Green Giant on the frozen food products and spent many hours sitting in front of the TV, dressed as his hero.

They had assumed that once he had taken up his law studies, that this particular obsession was dispensed with. However, recent pictures from Poznan prove that Collentine's Green Giant faze his far from in the past.

Friends, who did not wish to be named, have told The Echo that Collentine spent the entire week in Poland dressed in green, and when asked for his name at passport control, her simply replied: "Ho Ho Ho Green Giant".

Marc's hero: The Jolly Green Giant