St Clarets GFC: Take me to the river and wash me down

Daly's diminutive dilemma

Come in Comer

St Clarets fans concerned with the whereabouts of stay-away defender Niall Comer, were this week relieved to hear that the young starlet is alive and well and living by the sea.

Sadly, when he was spotted, he was clinging to a life raft, drifting aimlessly in the middle of the Atlantic (below).

So that's why he hasn't posted on Facebook recently!

Cavan lothario Phil Daly has failed to dampen rumours that he is about to ditch his St Clarets career in exchange for a shot at stardom in Hollywood.

The high-fielding Claretian, still reeling from the recent "Snow White" scandal which The Echo broke some weeks ago, is reported to have spent several days at a secret location in west London, auditioning for the role of Moses Hightower in the upcoming sequel to the block-busting franchise Police Academy.

Working hard: Daly along with another of his diminutive beauties

Producers are keen to try and re-ignite the on screen chemistry that existed between the original Hightower (the late Bubba Smith) and the pixie Laverne Hooks (Marion Ramsey).

The film makers have been encouraging Daly to spend time in the company of a bevy of diminutive beauties, so as they can establish who would be best to cast opposite Daly.

"It's hard going, day in day out, having all these lovely girls coming up to you and having to talk to them" Daly told friends. "And then there's all the drinking I have to do as part of it."

Our hearts bleed for you Phil.

Lynott banned

Claretians were shocked to learn this week that ace attacker, and Man Utd fan, Patrick Lynott has been banned from Turkey.

The unprecedented move by Turkish officials is said to be designed to protect UEFA official Cüneyt Çakır, who famously sent off Man Utd winger Nani last week.

The dramatic stance is rumoured to be purely on the off chance that Lynott should bump into him on the street in Turkey.

Mossie messes up

There was much anger within St Clarets last week when the truth behind the recent decision to ban the club from entering The Walkabout in Shepherd's Bush became known.

Players were left out in the cold on a recent club outing when bouncers refused entry to the entire party due to concerns about the ages of some of them.

Only last week it was discovered that Eamonn Colleran was the one to which attention was drawn, as he tried to enter the bar using his school bus pass.
