

The Claretian Echo

VOLUME 2: ISSUE 45

APRIL 25TH 2013

St Clarets GFC: How will I live without you?

Dummy in a dumb war

Lynott innocent

Man Utd nut Patrick Lynott has moved quickly to deny any involvement in sending Liverpool's Luis Suarez a dog cone collar following last Sunday's biting incident at Anfield against Chelsea's Branislav Ivanovic.

Claretian Lynott is also adamant that he had nothing to do with exchanging the Chelsea physio's massage oil for Suarez's favourite BBQ sauce at half-time, when Ivanovic was receiving treatment on his arm.

Suarez at training yesterday

Big Phil Daly has once again found himself in hot water after embarking on a stand-up tour which he has called One and a Half Men.

Daly's first sell-out show, featuring his recently acquired Declan Donnelly ventriloquist dummy, ran into problems when he upset a female member of the audience.

With the dummy perched on his knee, Daly went through his usual dumb blonde jokes routine, when suddenly, a blonde woman in the audience stood up and started shouting at him.

"I've heard enough of your blonde jokes. What makes you think you can stereotype blonde women that way? What does the colour of a woman's hair have to do with her worth as a human being?" she screamed.

"It's people like you who keep women like me from being respected at work and from reaching our full potential as people" the attack went on.

"It's people like you that make others think that all blondes are dumb! You and your kind continue to perpetuate discrimination against not only blondes, but women in general... all in the name of humour!" she concluded, exhausted from her rant.

Completely taken aback by the venom of the blonde girl's attack on him, an embarrassed Daly began to stutter an apology, when the blonde yelled up at him: "You can stay out of this! I'm talking to that little grinning shit on your lap."

Big Phil and dummy Dec backstage before the ill-fated gig

Jimmy "Fast Hands" Hanna draws Early

Early: still walking to work

Irish Post sports editor Ronan Early got more than he bargained for when he approached Claretian James Hanna regarding his recent low-budget cycling activities (Claretian Echo Issue 43).

Having read the article on Hanna's new gym regime, Early thought he recognised the bike that Hanna was riding, believing it to be the one he had stolen two weeks ago.

However, Early's polite Twitter enquiries were met with a somewhat threatening reply from Hanna, who tweeted: "If you want it, come and get it #mybikenow" before attaching a picture of him at a recent Washingbay Gun Club event.

A shocked Early backed down, claiming that he didn't like the old bike anyway.

Hanna gets whatever he wants