The Echo: Maybe one day you'll understand what makes us tick. Maybe.

Keane to get finished

Almost a month after starting his round at the St Clarets Golf Day, former player Colin Keane (right) is finally nearing completion.

Despite currently sitting at 3,578 over par, Keane is determined to finish his round in style.

Sadly his efforts have caused problems to users of the M25 as Colin has struggled to find the fairway on the tricky 17th at Stockley Park.

In fact, last week police had to close the motorway to allow Keane to play his 56th approach shot to that hole.

Keane of course has history with slow play, having taken almost ten years to complete one round in Buenos Aires, with everyone thinking he was working as a chippy in Clare at the time (issue 27).

Colin's score is so high that he's been approached by Rory McIlroy for a game.

Daly dazzles Darren

In a soon to be released no-holes-barred book by former Man United manager Alex Ferguson, Claretian defender Rickie Daly will be identified as the main reason behind the absence of United's Scottish midfielder Darren Fletcher over the past two seasons.

In an extract from the book, soon to be serialised by The Echo, Fergie says: "I've come across some characters in my day; there was Whiteside, McGrath, Robson and even Bestie, but when it comes to she-nanigans, that Rickie Daly boy takes the biscuit.

"Ever since he moved to England he's had Fletch dancing to his tune. If Daly texted "porter", Fletch would go running.

United die-hard Patrick Lynott has vowed to "sort" the problem next time he gets a fifty-fifty ball with Daly at training.

Mind you, Patrick would need to actually be at training for that to happen!

Hey Gringo

On-the-run Claretian James Hanna (below) has been found hiding in Mexico as he tries to avoid the attention of Irish Post sports editor Ronan Early, whose bike he "borrowed" at Easter.
