

The Claretian Echo

You ain't been anythinged until you've been Echoed

VOLUME 2: ISSUE 64

SEPTEMBER 4TH 2013

The visionary lies to himself, the liar only to others.

Mac names baby after Wynne

St Clarets legend John McDermott proudly announced the birth of his first daughter at the weekend, with negotiations still ongoing between Mac and wife Rebecca as to what the little girl will be called.

However, John has exclusively revealed to The Echo that his preference is to call the girl Gwynneth, in honour of someone he says he holds "very dear to my heart".

Having lost out in the push-chair battle with Rebecca after first son Joseph was born, it appears that Mac is determined to hold firm on the name issue, going so far as to say: "In this instance, it really is a matter of the Gwynner taking it all!"

Meanwhile, Mac's man-chum Gary Wynne is said to have held John's hand throughout the delivery, as he did for most of the pregnancy.

After the birth, Wynne posted a picture on Facebook stating: "It's a Gwynne-th baby" (pictured right).

Former man-nanny Mick Shea is said to be packed and ready to return to the McDermott household from Australia the moment he is asked. However, a very protective Wynne told The Echo: "I hope he's not holding his breath waiting for that call."

Eager Aidan does the petrol can-can on A406

In a desperate attempt at securing his place on the senior team, ageing defender Aidan Donaghy has volunteered to ride "shot-gun" with senior boss Ciaran Lenihan, just in case the Corkman ever runs out of petrol again. This follows revelations last week about Lenihan's fuel mishap.

As a result, ever-green Donaghy has vowed to "be there for you coach".

Sadly for Aidan, it appears that Ciaran hasn't learned his lesson from last week's petrol fiasco, and Donaghy ended up doing a five mile run last Wednesday along the North Circular Road carrying a petrol can, in order to rescue his football boss. Aidan posted the details on Facebook as soon as he got home (right).

However, it remains to be seen if his actions have secured his place on the team. Apparently Ciaran is concerned that Aidan might be over-training.

