Lynott's looking for Lucan's loot

Stunned by the news that his youngest children Patrick and Noreen have recently committed to a "group wedding" conducted by the Rev Sun Myung Moon of the Unification Church, Kevin Lynott has approached long-standing friend Lord "Rolly" Lucan (Echo issue 1) for financial help in trying to pay for the upcoming ceremony.

Initially, Lynott was said to be shell-shocked by the news of the nuptials, although wife Marge says that he has finally come to terms with the fact that he will be paying for the weddings of 23,546 other couples, as well as those of Noreen and Patrick.

Despite his predicament, Kevin was left disappointed when life-long pal Rolly refused to help out. In a desperate attempt to raise the £2.4m needed, Kevin started digging up the garden of Rolly's west of Ireland hideaway, looking for the buried loot that disappeared at the same time as Lord Lucan.

Thus far, all Lynott has found are the remains of a Neolithic man, buried around about 3000BC, along with an All Ireland football medal. He is believed to have been a member of the last Mayo team to win an All Ireland. However, as no living Mayo man has ever seen such a medal before, experts have had to send it to Galway for authentication.

Lucan in the wrong place: Rolly

No gold digger: Kevin Lynott

Colm puts a lucky (key)ring on it

Lynott's Lucky Lynch-ring

Colm Lynott (inset) has been glued to his Paddy Power app ever since acquiring a special Barry Lynch "lucky" key ring.

Lynott, who was recently propositioned by Lynch, has found that his luck has changed dramatically since the Kerry man's advances, this despite knocking the Valentia Valentino back.

However, in recent weeks Colm has quite literally been in the money. Thus far, Lynott has landed major winners in both the Derby and Gold Cup, as well as a sneaky 150-1 shot on Uruguay striker Luis Suarez ordering an Italian take-away during the World Cup. Unfortunately though, his attempt to put money on Mayo winning Sam left staff in Paddy Power's in stitches on the floor.

Words fail Gerry

Romanian speaking goalkeeper Gerry Lynott (below) has refused to accept the blame for any of the defensive mix-ups in the Clarets back-line this year. Speaking through his interpreter, Lynott told The Echo: "When I'm talking to my backs, it's like I'm speaking a foreign language."
