Healy boys held in immigration bust

Residents of Church Road in Hayes were left stunned last Sunday morning when armed immigration officers descended on a mid-terrace house on the sleepy street.

The elite border-patrol squad raided the property, looking for a secret tunnel believed to lead all the way to the infamous "jungle" refugee camp in Calais, France.

Government officials were given a tip-off when one legal resident of the house, known only as Matthew, reported the appearance of a number of eastern European men wandering around his bedroom the previous night, all looking for the way out.

It is believed that a sibling of Matthew's, who can not be named for legal reasons, has been the mastermind behind a human trafficking ring, that has seen desperate Romanians being led through a maze of tunnels from Calais, eventually emerging in Matthew's downstairs bedroom.

Officers were said to be "shocked, but impressed" by the complexity of the operation, while Matthew's mother, Patricia, told The Echo:

Immigration officers prepare to raid the house on Church Road

"First there was Matt and his Healing Crew, then Conor and the whole Jehovah thing, and now this. I mean, this will take some beating."

With the track record Patricia boy's have, she might just regret having said that, as there's nothing they seem to like more than a challenge.

Lynch hung up on French love

Claretian Barry Lynch is said to be devastated following the sudden ending of his long distance relationship with the woman from the speaking clock..... in France

Lynch, whose romantic conversations left him with a phone bill of £1200 last month, was stunned to discover that Emmanuel, the name given to the French public information service, was talking to other men, including Barry's long-term pal Mick Shea.

Super-nanny returns

With news that ex-Clarets star Ger O'Sullivan may be on the look-out for an experienced child minder, former super-nanny Mick Shea is said to be keen on making a comeback.

The Kerryman posted a video on YouTube demonstrating the wide range of baby-care skills he possesses. Using Juicy Lucy as a prop, Shea (right) showed-off several of the trademark tricks that made him a household name in the past, and led to a bitter bidding war between the Donaghy and McDermott clans, as both families battled for his services.

As of yet, it is unclear whether O'Sullivan has any intention of hiring live-in help, although, given the content of the second video Shea accidentally posted from his recent trip to Newquay, it is highly unlikely he'll ever be allowed near a blow-up doll again.
