

The Claretian Echo

The Echo: The paper that will eventually break the internet

VOLUME 3: ISSUE 91

AUGUST 19TH 2014

"The average age of our reader is 19. It's been suggested that their average IQ is somewhat lower."

Lynott puts man love on ice

John Terry super-fan Patrick Lynott this week displayed his undying devotion to the Chelsea legend by mimicking his ice-bucket challenge in aid of ALS.

The former England captain took to the internet on Monday night, displaying his macho physique and iron-man will to his eight Twitter followers, as he dumped a bucket of ice over his head, before nominating team mate John Obi Mikel, former colleague Frank Lampard and current mafia employee and Napoli boss Rafa Benitez to do the same.

Despite the apparent spontaneity of the action, rumours have emerged that Lynott may have been sponsored by Hellmans during his five-seconds of fame, as rather bizarrely, he was heard to proclaim his liking for the salad dressing Mayonnaise right at the end of the short clip.

Lynott: follows the lead of his hero

Inspired by this show of courage from the Chelsea defensive kingpin, Patrick Lynott immediately took to the internet and threw a bucket of ice over his own head, in what has been described as "one of the greatest gestures of man-love ever seen on the worldwide web".

And just like his hero, Lynott then passed on nominations to two playing colleagues, Aidan Donaghy and Barry Lynch, as well as an elusive character from a secret island community known only as "The Nanny".

Terry: iron man with a boy band body

Following a warning from his landlord about the state of the carpets in his apartment, house proud Niall Quinn has come up with a novel way of keeping them clean - he's taken to walking on the walls.

Quinn's no carpet muncher

Lynch's red mist

Clarets' skipper Barry Lynch (right) was left stunned last week when his dentist told him he had a chronic case of gingivitis. Lynch wants his lawyers to sue hair dye makers L'Oreal, but they're reluctant, as they don't think he's worth it!

