Kelly cooks up a storm in Ballygar

She's my Crystal Meth
bitch

Kelly's Facebook warning to Crystal Swing's fans

Claretians were stunned this week by the news that young defender Luke Kelly has just received a lifetime ban from the annual Ballygar Carnival, following what was described as "concerning, stalkerish behaviour" during this year's extravaganza in the sleepy Galway village.

Kelly, who has been attending the glorified cattle mart every year since he was 3, is said to have developed an unhealthy fixation for the popular local singer Crystal Swing, to the point that he renamed her My Crystal Meth and refused to allow the singer to go on stage to perform, in case anyone else would look at her.

Kelly, an avid fan of the hit TV show Breaking Bad, posted a warning on Crystal Swing's facebook page informing her legion of fans of her new name.

When approached for comment about his son's behaviour, John Kelly told The Echo that he couldn't speak at that point as he was in the middle of a "cook".

Final alternative

Loyal Tyrone supporter Paddy Donaghy has decided to run his own alternative All Ireland Final day this year, as he hosts a marathon showing of all of Tyrone's All Ireland Final appearances, starting with the tear-jerkers of 1986 and 1995, and culminating with the trilogy of epics in 2003, '05 and '08.

All attendees at the event in Donaghy's house will receive a special edition red waterproof coat (retro sponsored by WJ Dolan), so that they can totally immerse themselves in the event (left).

Tickets can be purchased at the door, while food and drink will be provided free of charge.

Captain Crimson

Popular Claretian captain Barry Lynch (below) has opened up to The Echo about the dramatic hair colour changes that have taken place throughout the season.

"It's the pressure" a tearful Lynch explained. "When I accepted the captaincy, I never knew that there would be so much involved in it.

"I mean, I'm expected to turn up on time for matches to take the toss. There's no more of this waltzing up at half-time and giving some half baked apology. It's more responsibility than I realised.

"My hair has suffered most" he continued. "First it went orange, then yellow and now it is actually crimson. Hopefully next year's captain will be bald. I'd hate anyone to suffer the way that I have."
