#SupportBarry breaks the internet

Claretians were left stunned this week as the news emerged that Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg intends to sue the club, after its members broke the internet last weekend.

Super geek Zuckerberg is said to be furious at what he feels was a “strategic and coordinated” attack on the World Wide Web last Saturday, which cost his company millions of dollars in lost advertising revenue.

The incident in question occurred prior to Pat Lynott’s wedding, when a picture of Barry Lynch and his fiancée was posted on-line, following Hello magazines refusal to publish it.

Quickly, the photo went viral, as Claretians across the globe posted their approval, with a joint Facebook and Twitter campaign #SupportBarry gathering such momentum that the entire internet shut down for more than four hours.

One IT expert claimed that while there had been several attempts in the past to “break the internet”, there had never been one “as global, enthusiastic, heart-warming or spontaneous” as the #SupportBarry attack.

Meanwhile, attention-seeking reality TV star Kim Kardashian, is said to be furious with Lynch, having herself failed in her attempt to break the internet in 2014.

Once the web had been re-instated, she quickly posted on Twitter: “I’m coming to get you Lynch – I’m getting myself a bigger glass and a bigger ass”, a reference to her famous champagne pouring stunt in November of last year.

Weir do they go from here?

Shell-shocked members of the English club in Tyrone have taken dramatic steps to try and fill the void left by the departure of Lawrence Weir.

Weir, a regular member of the St Clarets side in 2015, is said to have left a “hole no mere mortal could fill” in the English team. While several players have attempted to replace the tenacious attacking half-back, none have come anywhere near achieving the standards set by the former UUJ student.

In a last ditch attempt to save their season, the club have taken the unprecedented step of trying to persuade the Pope to play for them.

However, a Vatican spokesperson told The Echo: “The Holy Father was flattered by the approach by English, but Pope Francis has always said that if he was ever going to play GAA, then it would be for Tony Murphy – the only living person known to have been alive at the time of Jesus.”

Hoop-la-la

Tadhg Lee this week announced that Mossie Colleran had been awarded the job of designer for his upcoming St Clarets themed wedding.

Colleran, a relative unknown in the world of fashion, impressed Tadhg with his proposal for the groomsmen, suggesting that they wear brown and white lambs wool jumpers (above), designed to coordinate with the green and white Shetland wool ganzie Lee will wear.

Excited Claretians are waiting for Mossie to reveal his vision for bride Claire. She though is said to be less excited!!
